

Investing in the future of Africa

Ensuring food security - the basic right of people to the food they need - is one of the greatest challenges facing the world community. The challenge is most critical in low-income, food-deficit countries. Of the 86 countries that are defined as low-income and food-deficient, 43 are in Africa.

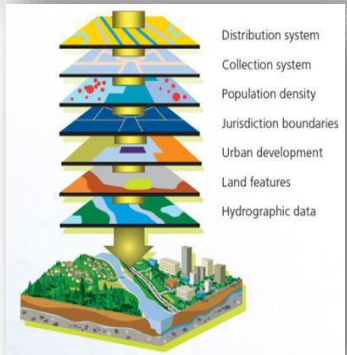

Despite overall gains in food production and food security on a global scale, many countries and whole regions have failed to make progress in recent decades. Sub-Saharan Africa, for example, produces less food per person today than it did three decades ago and the number of chronically undernourished people has increased dramatically.

To provide affordable nutritious food to the people is a massive challenge within the African agricultural landscape. The only way to achieve this is through an integrated food security portfolio management approach.

It requires a sustainable balance between demand and supply and integration of critical components.
